

63 Stowbrow - Mr Emery

On Stow - brow, in York - shire a fair young maid - did dwell; she lov - èd a young sai - lor and he loved her as well. They were go - ing to get - mar - ried when back he did re - turn, and what then fol - lowed af - ter my - song it - self - will learn.

1
 On Stowbrow, in Yorkshire a fair young maid did dwell;
 she lovèd a young sailor and he loved her as well.
 They were going to get married when back he did return,
 and what then followed after my song itself will learn.

2
 One day he was sailing all on the high, high seas
 when suddenly the winds and the waves began to rise;
 the storm it was rising and the billows loud did roar,
 which tossèd this young sailor all on the cruel, cruel shore.

3
 And as she was walking from Stowbrow to Bay*
 she saw a drownèd sailor that on the sand did lay;
 she steppèd up to him and proudly she did stand,
 she knew it was her true love by the marks on his left hand.

4
 She kissed him and she hugged him, ten thousand times
 or more;
 she kissed his cold, cold lips as he lay upon the shore.
 Now since that he was drownèd then like a child she cried,
 then lay down by his side, broken-hearted, and died.

5
 In Robin Hood's churchyard, which is near to Scarborough Bay;
 in Robin Hood's churchyard this couple they do lay.
 And all you constant lovers that do this way pass by,
 see this unfortunate couple, how happy they do lie.

* Bay = Robin Hood's Bay village